PREFACE.

The members whose records appear in this volume bear the National Numbers 28001 to 29000. They were admitted during 1899, while Miss Susan Revière Hetzel was Registrar General.

Among them are the names of twenty-two "Real Daughters," whose records should be interesting to students of longevity tables, since these ladies were alive one hundred and sixteen years after the close of the war in which their fathers fought.

The many references scattered through this volume show that the names of some of the same Revolutionary ancestors have appeared in previous volumes, a sure evidence that these sturdy patriots have more than one representative still living to carry on the work they began. Most of the names are new, however, and more than another regiment is thus saved from oblivion. Again they seem to stand in line, to remind the forgetful present of what it owes to the past.

The same faithful compiler, Sarah Hall Johnston, whose care has marked the preceding volumes, has given to this one whatever of good it contains, and I can not let it go to press without this public acknowledgement.

GERTRUDE B. DARWIN.
